554 of the Bedouin attitude, or lack of it, toward religion.
792 Since the time of Muhammad, the Bedouins have been considered 791 notoriously bad Muslims. Today, the Bedouins tend to joke about their lack of zeal, and often point out that "holy 619 men" are not to be trusted.[2] This is seen in Sa'adi behavior 771 toward the Marabtin tribes who are their vassals. Theoretically, 792 the Marabtin who trace descent to the Prophet and might be 554 considered "sacred Tribes" should be respected by the "secular" [778] Sa'adi tribes. But the Sa'adi of al-Qasr tend to deride the 554 Marabit. For instance, the "holy man" of al-Qasr, 'Amm Salih, 792 is a Marabit and well-known for his ability to successfully 627 mediate in conflict situations. But one informant, pointing 619 out this gift which 'Amm Salih possesses, said: "Amm Salih is a good man, he is not a Marabit." But 'Amm Salih identifies himself as a "rajal saalih" and a "Marabit"; he sees no role conflict here.

771 The Bedouins also joke about the manner in which they •[522] practice the "pillars of Islam." Especially, they make light of the fact that they are irregular in mosque attendance.
They say, with a slight smile, "we pray in the desert." A [124] common way for an interview to end was by an informant rising and saying: "Now I must wash for prayers." This happened

[184] [2]Professor Abou-Zeid also notes this trait in his study of the Bedouin near Sallum, on the Libyan border (1966:248).

156 159 554 635 537 634 122 522 and they sat on chairs inside the tent. I returned to Marsa Matruh in the 'umda's car (1964 Ford, highly polished) with the 'umda and the shaikh. They openly joked about Hajj 'Ali and his manner of presentation; they repeated some of his "stilted" phrases and laughed. Hajj 'Ali gave last year's reception speech also. This is because, his son says, Hajj 'Ali is considered a fine speaker by the Bedouins of al-Qasr.

121 177 178 We can see how these details carry larger implications within the context of political and social structures undergoing change. It is the stuff which the anthropologist finds important for an understanding of the process of change.

156 159 554 177 178 If I have established thus far that Hajj 'Ali is politically active and representative in both the traditional and the modern systems, then the attempt is now to prove that he consciously seeks to change the traditional in the direction of the modern for political and moral reasons, and for social and personal reasons.

156 159 554 177 178 124 829 571 Hajj 'Ali, when he spoke with me, inevitably came around to the subject of international politics, whether this was the question of Israel or the image which America's racial problems presented. Hajj 'Ali was the only man from the whole Marsa Matruh area who was neither shaikh nor 'umda to attend the nomination of Jamal Abd al-Nasser in January of 1965. In all of this, I detect a move on the part of Hajj 'Ali to identify himself with an Egyptian reference group and to 684 613 562 593 The contractual nature of marriage is most clearly manifested in the case of the wife's adultery. Since the woman belongs to her agnatic group, her behavior has direct effect on the honor of that group. It is, therefore, the responsibility of her closest kin to keep an eye on her. If the woman commits adultery, it is her father or her male kin who is supposed to avenge the honor of the family by taking drastic actions, including killing, against the adulteress and/or her partner. But the marriage usually takes the woman away from the close watch of her family and puts her under the supervision of her husband who becomes entrusted with the duty of guarding her, and therefore partially responsible for her action. His responsibility is enhanced by the fact that although the wife's behavior does not affect him or his family, it has a definite effect on the honor and reputation of his children (Abou-Zeid, 1965).

684 578 562 593 [522] The gravest insult that one can direct to a person in the area is to describe his mother of being of disrepute. In their joking relations, young men usually refer to eachother's father as being a dog or a theif or a cheat, but none could refer to the mother. A woman of questionable reputation affects the reputation of her family in general and her children in particular. Any reference to the mother in the form of an accusation is supposed to be cleaned only by blood. Not only does this apply to the woman's voluntary behavior, but also to her physical and mental [734] condition. If a woman loses her mind, the news is usually kept a secret, especially by her children. The responsibility for retaliation in the 684 613 562 593 case of adultery, then, is divided between her nearest kinsman and her husband. This gives both sides a vague and undetermined right of revenge. This division of the right of revenge explains the infrequency
